THE SCIENCE OF SUCCESSION (The Completion of You)

What Began Begins:

1. What Knows
2. What Becomes Known
3. What Needs to Know More
4. What Knows What Needs to Be Known
5. What is New

What Is Succession

Information is that which conveys what can be, while consciousness is that which knows why to become known as what is needed. Consciousness is that which became known and that which knows it became known. Consciousness is knowing known to know you and knowing that began why it began as you. In other words, we know that we know, we know what can be known as who we want to be, and we are known to be that which wanted to be known.

When there is knowing, there is time. It could therefore be said that time is knowing, as time is relative. It is relative in that it is that which knows and it is also that which is known. It is relative because time is knowing that became us, knows us, reflects on itself to know what else it can be known to be, decides why to know it as what it can be, and accumulates more of what can be known.

It is the quantum that confirm the existence of time. That is because, while there is knowing, there are always decisions. Decisions inform the knowing of the quantum, influencing quantum states, what begins, what becomes known, and why to know it.

When we begin to know, we are being what is about to be. When we decide why to know what we know, we begin to be known with what we have decided to know. The possibility of what is about to be known can therefore be said to be known and unknown simultaneously. It exists in superposition until the decision maker, that's us, decides what we are known to be. The quantum know and don't know what we are about to be.

Quantum knowing is a brand-new idea, which will soon be accepted once the idea that consciousness is all there is and everything else that can be known subsists as what began as consciousness. When there is consciousness, there is beginning. When there is beginning, there is acknowledgement of what can begin. What can begin is knowing that knows you, knows what is about to be, and practices why it can be more.

To wrangle “what needed to be” from its place as “the known” to being known as a past “how” is the evolution of consciousness.

To wrangle “what promises to be” from its place as “why to be known” is what evolves consciousness.

To wrangle “decoherence of what was about to be” from “knowing why and why not to know it” is the need of consciousness to evolve.

Further, we know “now” to be known knowing that needed to begin. We know “now” as what can begin to be. And we know “now” as that which began to begin what-can-be-known as what needs to be known.

When we practice knowing what knows to know us, we are conscious of who we can yet be. All of life can be understood as a succession of who we can yet know as us.
